

How to recognize quality Fatwood:

Good fatwood

Darker, rich amber color - Genuine Fatwood is saturated in pine resin, which is highly flammable. As the resin concentrates in the stump, the wood becomes darker and stickier. Only Better Wood Products® Fatwood is a minimum 85% resinous.

Strict, expert grading of Fatwood - Part of our dedication to our customer is our relentless quality control. We source our wood and create products to the strictest guidelines, guaranteeing high resin content, low moisture, and uniform sizing. We have the best wood in the business and that's what you get.

100% all-natural with no additives - Our Fatwood is 100% wood with pine resin. With Fatwood one match is all it takes to have a blazing hearth or campfire in minutes, even when wet.

SCS Global Services certification - Only Better Wood Products® Fatwood is certified responsibly sourced by SCS Global Services. SCS is a global leader in providing leadership in third-party environmental and sustainability development. Certified eco-friendly - Rest easy knowing you are cleaning the forest.

*Certified products are marked with SCS Logo. Not all products are certified.

Bad fatwood

Wood that's light in color or even white - This means little to no resin in the wood. It will be difficult to light and have trouble staying lit.

No quality standards or specifications

- A lack of uniform production standards means less reliable sizing, variable quality, which means less product and value for your money. Ironically, it can be 'green' wood - Wood that's not properly dried won't light or burn nearly as well as Better Wood Products® Fatwood.

Possible toxic fumes or vapors - Added accelerants and substances can mean extra dangerous chemicals in your fires that you could inhale.

No commitment to sustainable future harvests. No guarantee it's responsibly-sourced wood - You could be purchasing illegally cut 'slash and burn' trees or even repurposed/recycled construction refuse or wood harboring invasive pests.
